

Mama Schillo

July 11, 2024

I remember the day I met you like it was yesterday as you came up to my house at the old place i used to live as a stray cat. You was scared of everyone but that didn't stop me. I took my time with you as I sat inside the screen door with cat food on the other side and every time you would eat I'd take my hand and slowly reach to pet you and I did this every day for a couple of weeks. You slowly warmed up to me and my family and you turned out to be one of the sweetest cat I've met. A month or two went by and you started bringing you stray kittens over then another couple of months went by and you came over when you were pregnant so me and my family decided to take you in and that's when we decided to make our home you forever home. A couple months later we decided to move and of course we took you and our two other cat and dog at the time with us and you wasn't the biggest fan of the car ride but was just fine in my arms it was like you knew I'd keep you safe no matter what. You was my emotional support animal you stuck by my side through all my hard times and you kept me going when I didn't want to because you knew you needed me because we was the only people that was willing to take our time and get you used to us so we could keep you. Years went on and you was starting to get older but most of the time that didn't stop you except when your teeth got bad and we started giving you soft cat food and we did that for about a year until your last day with us. It was heartbreaking to see you go but i knew i had to let you go. Now I can look up to the stars and know your up there with your baby's and your other cat family and playing with all the toys up there as you watch over me every day/night.

One day we will meet again. Rest easy mama gone but never forgotten 🤝❤️
