

Mushki Roundtree

Mushki was the most kind and compassionate being I'd ever had the pleasure of taking care of, although many times it sure seemed like she cared for me instead. This cat waited by my door every morning, memorized my car sounds to wait for me to come in, and even memorized the phrase "shower time" so she could sit with me while I showered. I'm grateful to have had her in my life, and I will be lost without her. She liked carrying around toys, sometimes stuffed animals bigger than herself, and meowing while she did it. She also liked sitting in the sink. She'd make this little chirp of acknowledgement any time I walked past, and shed flop onto her back for belly rubs. She never scratched, never bit, and never had a bad attitude. Everyone who met her loved her, and I don't think anyone would've deserved her, but I'm so grateful I got to experience her life. When my mom and I got her from cat welfare, we learned that the previous family who owned her had kids who were too rough with her, therefore they returned her. I was told not to interact with her unless interacted with, and that she was so scared of children that she might hide for the first few weeks. When we brought her in, I stood a distance away as my mom put her in front of food and water. Instead, she walked right up to me, and gave me her (first of many to come) signature happy chirp. Ever since then we have been best friends, and I'm heartbroken it's over, but so grateful for our time together. Mushki was loved and will always be loved, and I owe her so much for how happy she's made me.

Mushki Sabine Roundtree was an angel on Earth. She wasn't constant companion for 13 years. She was my cheerleader and my friend. She loved shrimp, marshmallows and queso dip but she loved her family more. She might have knocked us down and stolen our marshmallows, but she always picked us back up with her wide eyed love chirps, sharing her "baby" with us and never being a troublemaker. I feel sick with loss although I'm so grateful that she was a part of our lives.
