

Roon Smith

November 4, 2009 - December 1, 2023

Our boy was the heartbeat of our home. He could either be found lying on his little divot on top of the sofa pillow, sticking his snout out to lay in the sun puddles or walking our block at 7:00 PM sharp at his demand. He was not only funny, but handsome, friendly and really into licking the bottom of shoes when you'd get home. His ears would 'beep-boop' when you'd talk about him, he'd get mad at the mailman in uniform but would want pets when he was in regular clothes, he'd breakdance on the rug when he had a really itchy spot to get on his back, and he'd greet you every single time you got back. He would be called so many names like Roon, Stinky, Roonicus Sparticus, Roonald Weasley and many more. Roon was our soul dog. There will never be another like him, no matter how far and wide we search. I will never forget how he comforted me after losing my mother, and how he could sense my sadness. We will miss you laying between our legs, rooting in your bed, following us for chicken and we will never forget how much you taught us. How beautiful is it to have loved so deeply and been loved tenfold in return? Thank you, Stinky. Until we find you waiting at Rainbow Bridge.

“ We're going to get tattoos for you snooty boy. Wish you were here my love. Zach's upset you don't need the TV on anymore when we leave. Stops us in our tracks every time. Love you stinky boy. ”

“ I love you very much Roon. I am sorry I didn't give you just a little more time. If Heaven grants every person 1 unconditional wish, it'll be to have you live with us for eternity in our perfect home. Be patient. I'll be there in a few decades.

“ You are and always will be my very best boy! It's quiet without you here, stinky. Every night I go to tell you goodnight and it hits me again that you are gone. I love you so so much and can't wait to see the friends you make at Rainbow Bridge!
