

Rose Moreland

Best. Dog. Ever. She was my first true responsibility and the first living thing I was responsible for. She was everything to me. She loved to go on walks and as a puppy. She would randomly stop and have me carry her home. She loved playing around, barking and getting into a stance and then running off. She was so silly. I miss you running around, I miss your bark, I miss your licks, I miss your face. I miss talking to you. I miss carrying you, even though you were always too heavy for that. You were one of the only things I could show Emorett that would cheer him up when upset. The past couple of years had been rough for you, but I just didn't ever see this actually happening. Still can't believe it. This was the hardest thing I have ever done, and I will never get over it. I will miss you everyday, and we will never forget you. I hope you had a good life, and I hope you're in a better place, silly girl. Thank you for everything, My Rose.
