

Tony Lewis

September 13, 2022

My beloved cat Tony came to live with me when he was only 6 weeks old, the most rambunctious and energetic kitten from a litter of 7. The minute in the door, he leaped and sat on every piece of furniture possible as if marking it as his own. He knew he was home. As he grew, he amazed friends, family and neighbors with his lion-like look and gait and special tricks, which included jumping up to the peephole on the apartment door and waving his paws furiously as if chasing away unwanted visitors. He was an adored playmate to my three god kids, Vanessa, Viera and Nick. Born one year before Vanessa, he was a part of her life for her entire 15 years. Another popular maneuver was to lay himself out over Viera's shoes when she wasn't wearing them and aggressively refuse to let her have them back. He conquered both severe diabetes and debilitating seizures to live long past what was projected. Following me everywhere, he was both my shadow and my light. To me, his 16 years on this earth was all too brief, but in that time he knew he was cherished and loved by so many. And although he may not be physically in this world any longer, the love he brought to everyone's lives will be forever.
